

Tieto in India is redefining suCCCEss with a transformed way of working ‘Beautiful’, ‘outstanding’, ‘very lively’, ‘out of this world’ and ‘truly cutting edge’ are some of the adjectives our first-time visitors have used for describing Tieto’s new extended facilities in Pune.

At Tieto, we are continuing our renewal with new ways of working at our offices around the world. Next out to share its story is Pune, where the new state-of-the-art premises were officially opened in the first week of October by Kimmo Alkio, President and CEO of Tieto, accompanied by the CEO and management team members of one of our key customers.

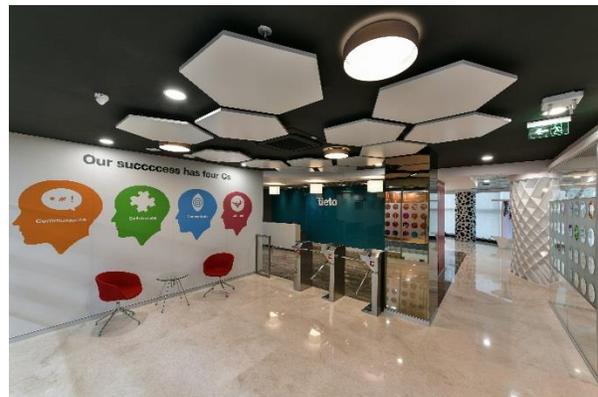

“This isn’t merely a new office or a more colorful workspace, but a transformed way of working. Based on the concept of our global headquarters and industry best practices, we have succeeded in shaping an extraordinary office where our people can get a space that will enhance the activities planned by her/him during the day,” says Nilesh Sahasrabudhe, Country Manager and Vice President at Tieto in India.

The four Cs

We understand that the way of working is evolving based on the technology revolution, global changes and presence of multi-generational workforce.

This paves the way for a flexible and agile workspace that is need and area based, is open for ecosystem, supports multiple roles, allows us to collaborate naturally and creates collisions.

The theme of Tieto’s new activity-based workspace in Pune is ‘Our suCCCEss has four Cs’, where the Cs stand for:

- Communication
- Collaboration
- Concentration
- Chilling out.

This provides the users ample space options for co-creation, project work, meetings, webcasts, phone calls, focused work and relaxation. The setup is the new as e.g. in the new Keilalahti head office in Espoo, Finland.

...and it's health- and environment-wise smart too

The new workspace is not only more vibrant, spacious and aesthetic, but also ensures better health for all our people. The uplift desks are come with a panel which enables the user to control its height and choose between sitting and standing while working on the laptop.

There are stand-up meeting rooms for quick catch-ups and movement options between different zones, which ensures that a person is not sitting in the same posture for too long.

The smart seat booking and meeting room management system will help Tieto in conserving energy by facilitating optimal use of resources.
